needing work, now in the hands of thirty-dight separate Government agencies, the expectation—based on the estimates of engineers themselves—is that at least 20 per cent. can be saved through united direction and proper organization under one department. Such a saving would be in a year $120,000,000.

It is evident to those who have made a preliminary investigation of conditional conditions of the supervising Architect. There are some in Congress who believe that once the Government machine is looked into by competent business efficiency engineers an annual saving of as much as $1,000,000,000 a year can be accompliated.

they are willing to be quoted on not more than $300,000,000.

The exact method to be pursued by the Joint Congressional Committee has not been decided, but in all probability it will engage a staff of business engineers to assist with the work. Hearings are to be held and the engineers are to be held and the engineers are to be turned loose in the departments, to study methods and to suggest improvements. As rapidly as these are found to be desirable the changes will be made, so that the taxpayers will not have to wait until the work is entirely completed before they will enjoy the benefits.

In general it is the feeling that the most practical way to go about the work of effective reorganization is, first, to accomplish a realignment of the different agencies grouping them or consolidating them into departments which seem to be the logical place for them, and then, second, to set about making them more efficient. To attempt in an instant to put into effect a broad instant to put into the properties and the probabil

In a general way it appears that not less than two new departments would be necessary in such a realignment of bureaus and other agencies, to be offset by the sholishment of at least one de-bureaus and other agencies, to be offset by the abolishment of at least one department and the possible consolidation of another. The two departments which are in mind to form are:

The Department of Public Welfare, as recommended by President Harding in his recent message to Congress, which would take over various work such as public health and education.

The Department of Public Works, which would have charge of many bureaus of similar character that now are scattered through other departments without any apparent rhyme or reason.

The matter of the consolidation of the War and Navy Departments, on the theory that they are intended to serve the same purpose, that of public defence, long has been considered as a possibility, and the proposal has had the indorsement of many who are familiar with the workings of the Government.

The suggestion is made that the De-partment of Public Welfare should take over at least these services:

recommended the consolidation of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Pension Bureau, the Federal Board for Vocational Education and other agencies which have to deal with veterans of records.

At least 25,000—maybe more—of the 100,000 Federal clerks in Washington are to be dropped from the rolls. Upon the fair basis that it costs $2,000 a year to maintain a clerk in Washington including salary, this alone means to deal with veterans of which are it one great service to be administered by a Director-General of Service to War Veterans. Steps already have been taken to accomplish this, and it will not wait on the general scheme for reorganization. Whether it is to be placed in what might possibly ton including salary, this alone means ton, including salary, this alone means a reduction in Government expense of $50,000,000.

It is evident to those who have made a preliminary investigation of conditions that other great sums can be saved through the consolidation of bureaus which are similar in their functions, but which are similar in their functions, but the Mississippi River Commission, the Mississippi River Commission, the which are similar in their functions, but for one reason or another set into different departments. Such advantages to the taxpayer would come through unified direction of these bureaus and the creation of a single staff to handle questions of personnel, accounting, disbursements and the like.
